

I wish that I could make a world of my own.
Where women chase their dreams, instead of hopeless relationships to prove their worth.

Where women are loved for their brains and not for the size of their waists.

Where women are judged based on their thoughts; instead of what they choose to put on their skin.

Where women are no more objects for sex but objects of respect and appreciation.

I wish I could make a world of my own; where women could save themselves and build castles from the bricks that have been thrown at them ...

Samiha Totanji